Five is a nainsook christening robe. All tucks and lace ruffles and no neck or arms, and a big knot of ribbon.

Six is a funny dud of white flannel night-iress with a drawing string at the foot, so that the infant cannot poke its toes into Seven is a fine muslin cap, with the most delicate feather stitchings and lace edgings and white ribbons.

Eight is a silk bonnet wadded and beautified with chiffon and feathers. It is rather a foolish thing. Nine is a coat for the child when it is a year old. The fabric is white camel's hair doth, and there are panels of delicate silk. Ten is a white wool mitten, and eleven is a boot of embroilered white finnel. The point to these finnel articles is to buy a sort which is unshrinkable; otherwise the garments will grow smaller as the infant waxes larger. And that is not to be desired.

Why Square Leg Wore Gloves. Mr. Phil May knows more of drawing than he knows of cricket, as you will perceive by looking carefully at his picture of a cricket match in Punch's Almanac. The drawing so preyedupon the nerves of Dr. W. G. Grace that he determined to protest. So, when Phil May arrived at the Punch dimer the other evening he found a telegram a waiting him: "Why, oh why! does square leg wear wicket-keeping gloves?—W.G. Grace."

At about midnight Phil May come out into Flori street and thought he would send an answer. So he went into the telegraph office and wrote it. The clerk, seeing the address, remarked that it was some miles from Bristol, and a special messenger would be required. "All right," said May, "send it off at once." And at about 2:30, on a bleak December morning the champion was awakened from his first sleep and dug from his bed to read the reply.
